

SPLASHES OF SUNSET

Once the Sun dipped behind the trees, the afterglow colours of scarlet, deep orange, threw the shades on the sea, the slow tide, and on the frothy damp sands. For a while I stood watching the sparkling colours of bright vermilion on the small waves tickling my feet.

I walked slowly leaving behind my camera fastened on the tripod my eyes drifted at the magnificent hues of teasing orange colours. I was stuck hypnotised at the power of the sinking sun how it dictated the sky with its intense tones.

Orange haze splashing the horizon, the seabed now shimmered with reflecting a mix of cloudy white and amber tints. It's time I have to quickly come out of this illusion to click the pictures before the magical brilliance of sunset melts into pale duskiness.
